66.09	Chemical technical reactions. Special chemical and biochemical processes The great variety of chemical reactions makes it impossible to denote each of them by a direct division of 66.09. The following methodological instructions explain how to denote reactions. 1) Many of the texts in 66.09 comprise both the general names of reactions and the specific names of commonly observed reactions. If need be, the latter can be denoted by methodological means, e.g. .095.118 Deacylation. .095.118:547.291 Deformylation. .095.118:547.292 Deacetylation. 2) Reactions with elimination of a particular group are denoted by .091.8. See examples at 66.091.8. 3) To designate a reagent, the appropriate -92 auxiliary is used, e.g. .094.3-926.217 Oxidation by air. .095.253-927.5 Alkylolation. Benzylolation. Phenylethylolation. -92... should be used only when the resources of 66.09 have been exhausted creates difficulties when dates from both the pre-Christian and Christian eras are needed.

If the citation order 'date - place' is preferred, so as to place Roman art after Greek, for example, this may be achieved by citing the date before the area number. In this case, the '0 auxiliaries must precede the date, as in an automated system the numerals file in ascending order and this will create difficulties with dates that cover the pre-Christian and Christian eras.
